Friday 6th, February 2015, 7:30 -10:30am

This free event is for the local business community to discuss what devolution could mean for Worcestershire and across the West Midlands. A particular focus will be on the potential of a combined authority and how this could impact skills, transport and business support.

The debate will be chaired by Mary Rhodes of BBC Midlands Today, presenter of the devolution debate on BBC1 in the West Midlands, and a panel made up of:

Bob Brown – Branch Chairman at Institute of Directors
Gary Woodman – Worcestershire Local Enterprise Partnership Executive Director
Judi Brazkiewicz – The Federation of Small Businesses Chairman for Worcestershire
Mike Ashton – Chief Executive at Herefordshire & Worcestershire Chamber of Commerce
Stuart Laverick – Principal and Chief Executive of Heart of Worcestershire College

A number of political representatives will also be present on the day. This event is unmissable for local businesses who want the mysteries of devolution unravelled and to have their say on what our priorities should be moving forward.

The morning will also begin with a networking period with complimentary refreshments.
